

Tasty Meds

Reviews of Colorado's finest medicated products

Pineapple Toasted Coconut Sucker by Mountain High Suckers

review by Sam Ruderman

The Pineapple Toasted Coconut sucker from Mountain High Suckers is potent in both THC and CBD. First off, this lollipop looks amazing. The toasted coconut flakes are suspended in pineapple infused deliciousness. While the pineapple flavor dominates, the toasted coconut flakes are a tasty reward the more you suck. This discreet treat can be taken anywhere and is perfect for the on-the-go cannabis consumer. It takes a while for the lollipop to dissolve in your mouth, creating what I'd call a "slow-release" effect. The CBD provides a pleasant body high, while the 28 mgs of THC will leave you with more of the lingering, yet enjoyable, stoney-baloney type high. I would recommend this sucker for when you are hung-over and want to take a two-hour nap during the day. It comes on slow, but it's strong, and it lasts the better part of a day. I enjoyed this edible, and I am excited to try the other unique flavors available from Mountain High Suckers www.mountainhighsuckers.com.

King Banana PHO Wax by Craft 710

reviewed by Monocle Man

Craft 710 is one of the newer concentrate companies to hit the market. I've been following them on social media for a little bit now and have been anxious to try their product. A big thing that sets Craft 710 apart from other concentrate companies is their PHO. No not that soup people can't get enough of, it's propane hash oil. It's the first time I've really seen a company offer propane extraction and I was intrigued to try it. The stars had finally aligned and I stopped in Herbal Remedies in Denver, where they had a variety of strains available. One of the budtenders recommended the King Banana and I gladly took the recommendation. The PHO wax looks similar to what you get with BHO but there were a couple differences. A big thing was the PHO was much easier to work with. Craft 710 cuts perfect squared grams that don't crumble and break apart like other wax. These will almost snap apart and won't burst into pieces. One thing I quickly noticed after trying a dab was a lot of characteristics of the flower come through with the extraction. There was a robust terpene profile that lingered on my fingers after I dropped a little chunk off. It had a cerebral high but was still clear headed. I found it to work great for stress and it helped with some discomfort I was having in my neck. It was a nice experience for my first time trying propane extracted concentrates. Make sure to follow Craft 710 on social media to stay up to date with which centers have their PHO in stock. www.craft710.com, www.facebook.com/Craft710

Sativa Quad Dose by Cheeba Chew - 70mg

reviewed by Monocle Man

Cheeba Chews can be found in pretty much any medical center across the state. Their tasty infused chocolate taffies have become a staple in the industry for edibles. The Sativa Quad Dose is a staff favorite here at THC Magazine. At 70mg this tasty chocolate packs a punch. For someone who is new to edibles I would recommend cutting the Cheeba Chew into small pieces. It may prove to be hard to just have one or two small pieces because these things are delicious. Since eating edibles is in my job description I could easily eat half and be operational. So I did just that and took a huge bite into the soft, creamy chocolate. The initial effects took about 15 minutes to start kicking in. There was a light body high that slowly took over my body. The Sativa hash oil gave me some pep and had a clean head high. Some edibles can knock you down for the count but these will keep you going. If you haven't had a Cheeba Chew before, what are you waiting for? Chew wisely and pick Cheeba Chews. Check out their website for more information on their full line of products. www.cheebachew.com

